Works bad on Windows 10. Please fix it.. GTA IV is the third most best game in the entirely gta series, it has rich storyline better than gta v,better physics,graphics is nice compare to 2008 games,but poorly optimised. It's a nice game but you gotta remember that this game is old as before you complain. I like it but I would prefer "GRAND THEFT AUTO V" instead. Often overshadowed by it's successor I find this game to actually be the superior of the 2 games, it has some compatability issues but if you get them worked out you are in for a great time.

The Story is engaging, dark, deep, rough and real, Niko is a great protagonist putting you in the world of foreigners immigrating to America in search of the "American Dream" but getting caught up in the crime rings. You meet several interesting and wonderful characters along the way who can surprise you, everything is done in a personal and human way.

This stands to possibly be one of the greatest games ever made it's just a little rough around the edges with compatability issues and some (often funny) graphical glitches

Definitely buy it, you won't regret it. I love this game but it's kinda annoying that it's stuck at the loading screen if anyone knows how to fix this please tell me in comments. Modding this game has a 70% chance of crashing due to (Compability of the mod or you've downloaded some corrupted files or the files of the main game got corrupted or High usage of GPU/Memory). Mod this game at your own risk. And IT'S REALLY IMPORTANT TO MAKE A BACKUP. And for the Multiplayer, for now it's a Ghost Town.. When I played GTA IV first, back in 08, I was 16, and replaying the game as an adult has been a profound experience.

Grand Theft Auto is a slow game, sometimes annoying, sometimes boring and definitely clunky, but behind all these downsides there's a magic that only this chapter of the saga has and has never been replicated since.

The uniqueness of GTA IV is in its "cozy" nature; long gone are the wild and bombastic gameplay opportunities of San Andreas and the less serious fun factor of GTAV is still far away.

Grand theft auto IV took what is the core of the grand theft auto experience (arguably the driving and shooting), evolving it to a level that has never been matched, and that was severely downgraded in the still amazing (and in some case superior) GTA V. Driving takes patience and experience but is tremendously satisfying, as a result of this driving never gets old in this game, not even after 50 hours of playing, and the city is a joy to navigate through, with all its winding roads and interesting structures. The shooting mechanics share the same care, with a much better weapon feel than GTA V and a better choreography for the shootouts themselves.

Unlike every other GTA game the city itself offers less gameplay opportunities, but it's built with a care and character that was rarely matched in any other entry of the saga.

The atmosphere is purposely grey and dreadry, portraying a dark city where only the ruthless go ahead, and this is well in tone with the grim tone of the story...

And what a story...

GTA San Andreas had a great narrative, but GTA IV reached some untouched levels of storytelling, inside the Grand Theft Auto universe; characters are insanely well built and every single dialogue gives us a bit of insight into the mind of whoever is speaking.

GTA IV is a mosaic of accents, habits, phobias, behavioural problems, different motivations and so on; there's a bit for everyone...grim characters, funny characters, serious characters...you name it, and every single mission and cutscene fits into a vast tapestry with interconnected pieces of narrative, which all work towards a final glorious narrative, with some insanely satisfying payoffs and genuinely heartbreaking moments.

GTA IV is a must play for every grand theft auto fan and it's well worth enduring its many shortcomings (mainly the fact that all the missions basically follow the same structure of driving-chasing-killing) to experience an amazing piece of digital entertainment and a design philosophy which, for better or for worse, will never be followed again (at least in the GTA franchise).

Great game and the usual GTA experience.. Good game, too bad GFWL had to ruin it.

With how dependent this game is on GFWL, you're essentially buying an unplayable game. I managed to get 29 hours in before GFWL decided to render any of my progression obsolete.

4/5 for the game.

0/5 for GFWL. Can you believe that this is one of the best selling games of all time, and that Rockstar is probably the richest software developer of all time, and yet they can still have a game engine running as badly as this? How can they still sell this and sleep at night?

Rockstar should be ASHAMED of themselves. Running this on modern hardware, in front of somebody, is EMBARRASSING! If you enable 4x DSR from drivers and max the game out, it looks incredible. BUT IT RUNS SO BADLY. THE FRAME PACING IS THE WORST I HAVE EVER SEEN ANYWHERE EVER! What's so disheartening, is that in 50 years time, when hardware is thousands of times more powerful than it is now, this game will still stutter like this, not because of performance reasons, but because of a game engine which doesn't render ahead correctly (and that's literally all that it is).

They won't fix the relentless stuttering and hitching. They won't patch GFWL out. Is this too much to ask of these billionaires? The only thing they'll do is patch some music out of the game, because the 'license expired'. It's like all the "evils of capitalism" satire, that Rockstar like to bang on about on their progressive left wing ideological platform, come true, with none of the irony lost on them, as they battle against what little remaining freedom you still have in the world. What, you thought that because they took the \u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665 out of some roasties and soyboys, that they aren't a bunch of big government socialists? Might as well keep on pretending that you can get a gun without a license in California.

GTA IV is one of my favourite games of all time, ok? But looking back, it's almost unbelievable that we had to have GTA V, before they pull fingers out and give us a half decent game engine. And even then, it looks like they finally just patched/improved/optomised the existing RAGE engine, so that it runs more efficiently and renders ahead correctly, then employed a group of enthusiastic ENB series modders, far more skilled than the folks at Rockstar are, to make the graphics look nicer. And then litigate and persecute anybody who dares attempt to import GTA IV into the new engine, you know, the engine that actually works properly, unlike this one.... Windows live. Not much more to say.. Dont get this. There is DRM \u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665t that u cant even get to work. Needs an update ASAP. You literally cannot save your game without "Games for Windows Live" account that requires online sign in. IS GFWL even a thing anymore? Buyer Beware.. The best GTA story ever. This game is often more serious than the other GTA games. We are playing the story of a Serbian guy, Niko Bellic who has recently come to the Liberty City (New York). While making his name heard amongst Crime families, he also rounds up and takes care of his family, his real family.... Good game yet this is a awful optimized game.. idc what anyone says, gta 4 has an amazing story. You guys should keep your old games work stable on new platforms instead of releasing new games. Why do I need to spend several hours trying to launch the game on Win10? The game is great, but I can't run it on my PC.
