A nice game if you want to spend some useless time on your day, chills you after some heavy day of work (for most people haha), and worth it for the price. The price is consistent with the number on stages. If you're good with this style of game, you will end it very fast. But worth it anyway.. This game is charming and has potential, but it's totally flawed in that A) It's pretty hard to control with just arrow keys, which is the whole point of the game (moving the ball around the course), and B) After you fall and respawn, all of your momentum is conserved from before you fell. So if you were rolling up, for example, and then fell off the course, you will respawn still rolling up. I just need it to kill all momentum when I respawn for minimal cancer.

EDIT: It has been brought to my attention that my second point was fixed. You will no longer retain momentum after respawning from a fall.. Lovely meditative game to play while waiting for something for example. Last patch made the ball a bit easier to control, but it's still plenty difficult, which is good.. EDIT: It has been brought to my attention that my second point was fixed. You will no longer retain momentum after respawning from a fall.. This game crashes a lot for me, and I'm not sure why.

Putting that aside, this game although very atmospheric, I do not find it that pleasant.

The controls were very off-putting for me, though I did find Alt Controls in the options which made it better for me. The obstacles seem extremely difficult. I know it is supposed to be a challenge, but it feels like it's a last decision "make or break" everywhere I go. Sometimes, I just randomly stop moving, which I'm sure is the game trying to turn around, but it's so weird compared to the acceleration the ball starts at. Also for some reason, if you play a level again and don't get the star/time bonus, it just takes it away from you if you previously had it.

It's an alright game, but it feels too much like a bad browser flash game. I wouldn't pick this up unless you are looking for something new, or if it goes on sale..
